A bumpy ride upwards for global yields

- Investors now want more compensation for the risk of holding long-term bonds. We see this as a return to past norms and keep our long-held underweight.
- U.S. stocks rose nearly 2% last week, led by tech stocks. U.S. 10-year Treasury yields fell but are 50 basis points above their April lows.
- U.S. jobs data this week will show how the labor market is holding up. The European Central Bank is set to cut policy rates as it eyes the impact of tariffs.

Long-term U.S. bond yields jumped from April lows as policy developments, like the budget bill, draw focus to U.S. debt sustainability. This has revived questions about the diversification role of Treasuries. We have long pointed to the low, even negative, risk premium investors accepted for Treasuries – and expected it to change. That's now playing out, dragging up developed market government bond yields. We stay underweight long-term bonds but prefer the euro area to the U.S.

Following the U.S.

10-year U.S. yields vs. ex-U.S. developed market yields, 1990-2025

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of current or future results. Source: BlackRock Investment Institute, with data from LSEG Datastream, May 2025. Notes: The chart shows U.S. 10-year Treasury yields and an average of 10-year German, Japanese and UK government bond yields.

Ultra-low interest rates in the pandemic lulled investors into a sense of safety about ballooning government debt. They accepted lower term premium, or compensation for the risk of holding that debt over a long time. That pulled down global yields as well. See the chart. But long-term yields are up sharply since April as investors demand more term premium. We have long expected that. In 2021, we flagged that elevated government debt created a fragile equilibrium, with bonds vulnerable to changing investor perception of their risk. And we pointed to persistent inflation pressure from post-pandemic supply disruptions. Higher inflation, and thus higher policy rates along with any rise in term premium, boost debt servicing costs. We're still underweight long-term developed market (DM) government bonds, but have a relative preference for the euro area and Japan over the U.S.

Our strongest conviction has been staying underweight long-term U.S. Treasuries. We maintain that view as concerns about the deficit mount. In March, we estimated the U.S. deficit-to-GDP ratio would land in the 5% to 7% range, based on external forecasts of the impact of proposed trade, fiscal and immigration policy. Since then, Moody's cut the U.S. top-notch credit rating and Congress is considering a budget bill that we think could push deficits to the upper end of that range – or beyond. We're watching to see if these changes impact foreign investors and drive term premium even higher.

In Japan, 30-year bond yields hit a record high in May, confirming our long-standing underweight. Japan's central bank – historically the largest government bond buyer as part of policy easing to lift the economy out of deflation – has trimmed purchases as part of its policy normalization. That has put pressure on long-term yields, and a recent long-term bond auction drew the weakest demand in a decade. This in turn prompted Japan's Ministry of Finance to consider trimming long-term bond sales. If yields rise more, the government's cost to service its debt – now twice the size of its economy – will also rise.

The UK is already rolling back long-term bond issuance amid lower demand and higher yields. Meanwhile, euro area yields have been rising as governments up defense and infrastructure investment. Yet we prefer euro area government bonds to the U.S. They're increasingly less correlated to fluctuations in U.S. Treasuries, and a sluggish economy gives the European Central Bank more room to cut rates in the near term. For income, we prefer shorter-term government bonds and European credit – both investment grade and high-yield – over the U.S. on cheaper valuations.

On equities, we flipped back to being pro-risk in April once it became clear that hard economic rules limit how far U.S. policy can move from the status quo, such as how foreign investors fund U.S. debt. Our U.S. equity overweight relies on that rule, just as another rule – supply chains can't rewire overnight without serious disruption – proved binding on trade policy. This overweight is grounded in the artificial intelligence mega force – reinforced by Nvidia's earnings beat last week.

Bottom line: U.S. Treasury yields have jumped since April. That's a global story of normalizing term premium. We stay underweight long-term DM government bonds, preferring shorter-term bonds and euro area credit.

Market backdrop

U.S. stocks gained nearly 2% last week, led by tech stocks after Nvidia beat earnings expectations. The S&P 500 was up nearly 22% from its April lows. Stocks got a boost during the week after a U.S. trade court blocked most of the new U.S. tariffs. But a federal appeals court later granted a stay on the decision – allowing the tariffs to stay in place until a final decision is reached. U.S. 10-year Treasury yields edged down to 4.40% but are still 50 basis points above their April lows.

Week ahead

| | | | |
|---------------|--|---------------|---------------|
| June 3 | Flash euro area inflation; euro area unemployment data | June 6 | U.S. payrolls |
| June 5 | European Central Bank policy decision | | |

We're watching this week's U.S. payroll data for May after job gains topped expectations and wage growth cooled in April. We're tracking the impact of trade disruptions on hiring and how slowing labor force growth affects wage pressures. We see the European Central Bank cutting policy rates modestly but look for signs that it might cut more deeply if trade disruptions weigh on euro area growth.

Big calls

Our highest conviction views on six- to 12-month (tactical) and over five-year (strategic) horizons, June 2025

| Tactical | Reasons |
|--|---|
| U.S. equities | Policy uncertainty and supply disruptions are weighing on near-term growth, raising the risk of a contraction. Yet we think U.S. equities will regain global leadership as the AI theme keeps providing near-term earnings support and could drive productivity in the long term. |
| Japanese equities | We are overweight. Ongoing shareholder-friendly corporate reforms remain a positive. We prefer unhedged exposures given the yen's potential strength during bouts of market stress. |
| Selective in fixed income | Persistent deficits and sticky inflation in the U.S. make us underweight long-term U.S. Treasuries. We also prefer European credit – both investment grade and high yield – over the U.S. on more attractive spreads. |
| Strategic | Reasons |
| Infrastructure equity and private credit | We see opportunities in infrastructure equity due to attractive relative valuations and mega forces. We think private credit will earn lending share as banks retreat – and at attractive returns. |
| Fixed income granularity | We prefer short-term inflation-linked bonds over nominal developed market (DM) government bonds, as U.S. tariffs could push up inflation. Within DM government bonds, we favor UK gilts over other regions. |
| Equity granularity | We favor emerging over developed markets yet get selective in both. Emerging markets (EM) at the cross current of mega forces – like India – offer opportunities. In DM, we like Japan as the return of inflation and corporate reforms brighten the outlook. |

Tracking five mega forces

Mega forces are big, structural changes that affect investing now – and far in the future. As key drivers of the new regime of greater macroeconomic and market volatility, they change the long-term growth and inflation outlook and are poised to create big shifts in profitability across economies and sectors. This creates major opportunities – and risks – for investors. See our web hub for our research and related content on each mega force.

- 1. Demographic divergence: The world is split between aging advanced economies and younger emerging markets – with different implications.
- 2. Digital disruption and artificial intelligence (AI): Technologies are transforming how we live and work.
- 3. Geopolitical fragmentation and economic competition: Globalization is being rewired as the world splits into competing blocs.
- 4. Future of finance: A fast-evolving financial architecture is changing how households and companies use cash, borrow, transact and seek returns.
- 5. Transition to a low-carbon economy: The transition is set to spur a massive capital reallocation as energy systems are rewired.
